America, American Jews and the Holocaust

FRED ROSENBAUM

SKIRBALL
CORNER

No U.S. president has been more beloved by American Jews than Franklin Delano Roosevelt, but during World War II his administration neither expanded immigration quotas nor rescued European Jews, nor bombed the killing machinery of Auschwitz. Drawing upon important new scholarship, we will examine carefully this record and consider the causes of what one historian has termed Roosevelt's "greatest failure."

Why Is This Day Different From All Others? Jews at Christmas

DR. JOSHUA ELI PLAUT

Sunday, Dec. 12 10 AM – 2 PM

For many 19th century European Jews, Christmas Eve was known as Nittel Nakhkt, an occasion to refrain from Torah study and public Jewish activities. At the same time, in America, some Jews were attending social balls and engaging in acts of goodwill—such as Christmas gift drives. This seminar will look at key texts, oral history testimonies, sermons and reports from the late 19th and early 20th centuries and contextualize this behavior in reference to today.

KEYAM DISHMAYA AND REVITALIZING CHANUKAH

The intellectual and spiritual life of the Jew always has been riddled with eternal and internal conflict and tension: this world and the world to come; reason and revelation; justice and mercy; negative commandment and positive precept; body and soul. Another such tension is to be found in the simultaneous tendencies of isolation and assimilation. No Jewish festival better embodies that tension than does Chanukah—ostensibly a festival of freedom but ultimately the freedom to be true to our own Jewish selves and not slave to the appeal of foreign traditions. This is only something to keep in the back of our minds as we all celebrate a happy holiday and wish our neighbors the same for their season.

Dr. Jonathan Sarna, the preeminent historian of American Jewish history (and a close relation to Temple Emanu-El), in his latest work, American Judaism—A History, points to the date of October 5, 1879, as the genesis meeting of an American Jewish organization called Keyam Dishmaya. It was a group of young Jews who focused their sights on the Chanukah festival, and Sarna's account is well worth reprinting.

On the “fateful...night” of October 5, 1879, a group of earnest young Jews from Philadelphia and New York met at an undisclosed Philadelphia location and bound themselves together in a solemn covenant “for God and Judaism.” They called themselves Keyam Dishmaya, an Aramaic term signifying their goal to uphold the dictates of heaven, and they pledged to do all in their power to bring Jews back “to the ancient faith.” “The great question for contemporary Judaism,” 26-year-old Max Cohen, later librarian of New York’s Maimonides Library, exclaimed in a letter to a friend, “is whether it will continue God’s work or cease to be.” His own conclusion, which the group as a whole shared, was unambiguous: “Israel must be whatever its children make it.”

A major goal of Keyam Dishmaya was to “recreate the ancient Hebrew Sabbath.” Sabbath observance had declined markedly in the post-Civil War years, as surging business pressures combined with stricter Sunday closing laws to magnify the losses experienced by Jews who kept their stores and offices shuttered on Saturday. A public appeal to New York Jews in 1868 “to restore the Sabbath to its pristine sanctity” had fallen on deaf ears. Now the young people hoped that their efforts might enjoy greater success. They viewed revitalization of the Jewish Sabbath as a first step in promoting the observance of a wide range of neglected Jewish practices and the fostering of a “higher spiritual life.”

Beyond this, members of the group led adult Bible classes, taught Sunday School, delivered lectures, promoted “the restoration of our people to the land of our inheritance,” and—most surprisingly from the perspective of later generations—worked to revitalize the Jewish “national” holiday of Chanukah.

This winter holiday, which commemorates the Maccabean victory and the rededication of the ancient Temple, seemed in danger of falling into “oblivion” in post-Civil War America.

The holiday’s message of anti-assimilation and national renewal ran counter to Reform Judaism’s universalistic ethos, and its comparatively minor status in the Jewish calendar made it an easy festival to neglect.

For those seeking to revitalize Judaism, however, Chanukah provided the perfect symbol. Chanukah celebrations, complete with convivial pageants and extensive publicity, served to counteract the growing allure of Christmas. [And,] the Chanukah festival sponsored in 1879 by Keyam Dishmaya proved particularly successful. “Every worker in the cause of revived Judaism,” one of the organizers wrote, “must have felt the inspiration exuded from the enthusiastic interest evinced by such a mass of Israel’s people.”

CANDLE LIGHTING WITH DOROT

Fulfill the mitzvot of lighting the Chanukah candles and of giving tzedakah by bringing great joy to a DOROT senior in need of companionship during the holiday season. Set aside one of your Chanukah nights to help light the chanukiah (Chanukah menorah) in the home of a DOROT senior.

DOROT provides visiting families with a chanukiah, candles, chocolate gelt, a dreidel and helpful guidelines for Chanukah blessings, songs and dreidel playing. All you need to bring is your family, and together with a DOROT senior, you can create a memorable and meaningful Chanukah tradition. Visits should last between 20 and 30 minutes and will be arranged on a Chanukah night and at a time that is convenient for your family.

As part of the program, each family is asked to contribute $50 per visit. If you are unable to make an actual visit, DOROT will send a teen volunteer in your place for every $50 collected. To register for a Chanukah night visit, call the DOROT office at (917) 441-5051. Checks should be made payable to DOROT and mailed to DOROT, 171 West 85th Street, New York, NY 10024.
